

When You Walked In My Shoes

When you walked in my shoes with me, my steps were so much lighter.
For you lessened my burden, that I had struggled alone to carry.
When I felt my share of the load diminish, to that which I could bear, I gave thanks that you answered my prayer, as my steps began to falter.

On that day, you showed me that I will never be alone in time of need,
If my faith in you does not waver, and I accept my share of any load.
Though I may grow weary walking onward, in the face of heat and thirst, I know you'll lead me to water, and when I drink it will soon cool me.

When I've reached my destination, and with your aid delivered what I'd carried, This phase of my journey is over, as I await your further guidance,
Of the best route to follow, when I am next called to deliver,
An even heavier burden, on a path that's hard to travel in life's unexpected storms.

November 6, 2004

Copyrighted by the author. Used by permission.

Please email contact@amwell.org if you want permission to use this in your own publications or to reprint it.

Downloaded from www.amwell.org